Even though natural disasters happen everywhere, FEMA (The Federal Emergency Management Agency), taking into account 18 natural disasters which happen around the United States, determined that

Los Angeles County is the U.S. community most at risk of suffering a major disaster.

As Southern Californians we are all too familiar with the vicious cycle of wildfires, followed by rain which causes mudslides and flooding, which results in faster brush growth, which provides fuel for the next round of fires, and the cycle repeats. We have also suffered the effects of a pandemic that has turned our lives upside down for close to a year.
